“DUTY IS OUR WORSHIP”

Service to the community as a Method of Social Work Practice Community service is considered as an effective method of practice in social work as it is used to address the broader social problems that affect a large group of people. Individual approach is not practical in a context where the magnitude of problems faced is alarming. In such cases, a method which can concurrently help a large number of people should be used. This is especially true in the case of developing countries where the magnitude of several problems faced by people is immense and so there is an urgent need to work with the larger population.

In such a context, the community becomes an important level of social work intervention, and community service emerges as an effective method of social work practice to ameliorate the widespread economic and social problems faced by the people. In order to bring this into reality, the college makes an attempt to initiate various activities through Community Action Projects by various departments in general and the Department of Social Work in particular.
